

Abstract

For the purpose of more accurate and more rapid nonmagnetic identification of organisms by way of a marking code on a marking element that can be provided on the organism, use is made of a marking code. The marking code is composed of regions with numerous different optically detectable and machine evaluatable criteria. In this case, annular marking elements made from non-magnetizable material are preferred.